QuickScan: your preferred learning style
What is QuickScan?

QuickScan is an online questionnaire which will identify your learning style, your need for study skills support and any indications of dyslexia or dyspraxia.

It takes approximately 20 minutes to complete. You will be asked 100 questions about how you study. It does not test your knowledge.

QuickScan is accessed online so you can take it from anywhere. If you need help using QuickScan please contact the Library Disability Support team:

What to do next

If QuickScan has identified dyslexia or dyspraxia indicators we recommend that you arrange a diagnostic assessment with an Educational Psychologist.

The cost of a diagnostic assessment is around £300, the University may be able to pay for this; if eligible for this funding, you will be asked to contribute £50 to the total cost.

Please note: Funding for diagnostic assessments is only available to students who have resided in the UK for at least 3 years prior to commencing study, and are eligible to receive student loans from their funding body.

The process of arranging a diagnostic assessment and any support that you might need while studying can take up to 12 weeks so please apply early.

To apply for funding, arrange a diagnostic assessment, or discuss reasonable adjustments

If QuickScan indicates that you don’t have dyslexia or dyspraxia, there are still resources available which you might find useful – see overleaf, and contact Disability Advice for more information.

Please note: QuickScan does not give a diagnosis of a Specific Learning Difficulty (SpLD): it only indicates if a further diagnostic assessment is recommended. Reasonable adjustments cannot be provided based on the results of QuickScan, nor can you use a QuickScan report as evidence that you have a disability or Specific Learning Difficulty.
